

MAGA family

FEBRUARY 2023

Kyleigh was the daughter of a very conservative US couple from Alabama. They were a poorly educated, lower-middle class family, where the father has a blue collar job, the mother was a housewife and Kyleigh was a college student with occasional seasonal jobs as a waitress. When trumpism became popular, they enthusiastically adhered to it and always made sure to make their views public. They were particularly vocal about their disdain for Latin American immigrants, who were flooding the country with their foreign influence, turning the American nation into an even more multicultural society.

Eventually, Kyleigh's father, David, went a bit overboard with his xenophobic views even talking about them at the workplace, which resulted in an argument with his boss, a mixed Mexican American man and a registered Democratic. As a punishment, David was transferred to a new branch of the same company opening in New Mexico. Being the breadwinner of the family, he couldn't afford to lose his job, and being middle-aged and poorly educated, he had little chances of finding a new one anytime soon, so the whole family was forced to relocate to New Mexico.

MAGA FAMILY

Kyleigh felt a lot lonely being one of the few white girls in the area, even worse being the only MAGA supporter in her age group.

The whole family didn't really like their neighbourhood, crowded as it was with Latinos and African Americans. Even the local TV news were bilingual Spanish-English and many of the TV channels they got were Mexican anyway. Oddly enough, however, they got used to the narco-culture aesthetics surrounding them and began to change themselves.

MAGA FAMILY

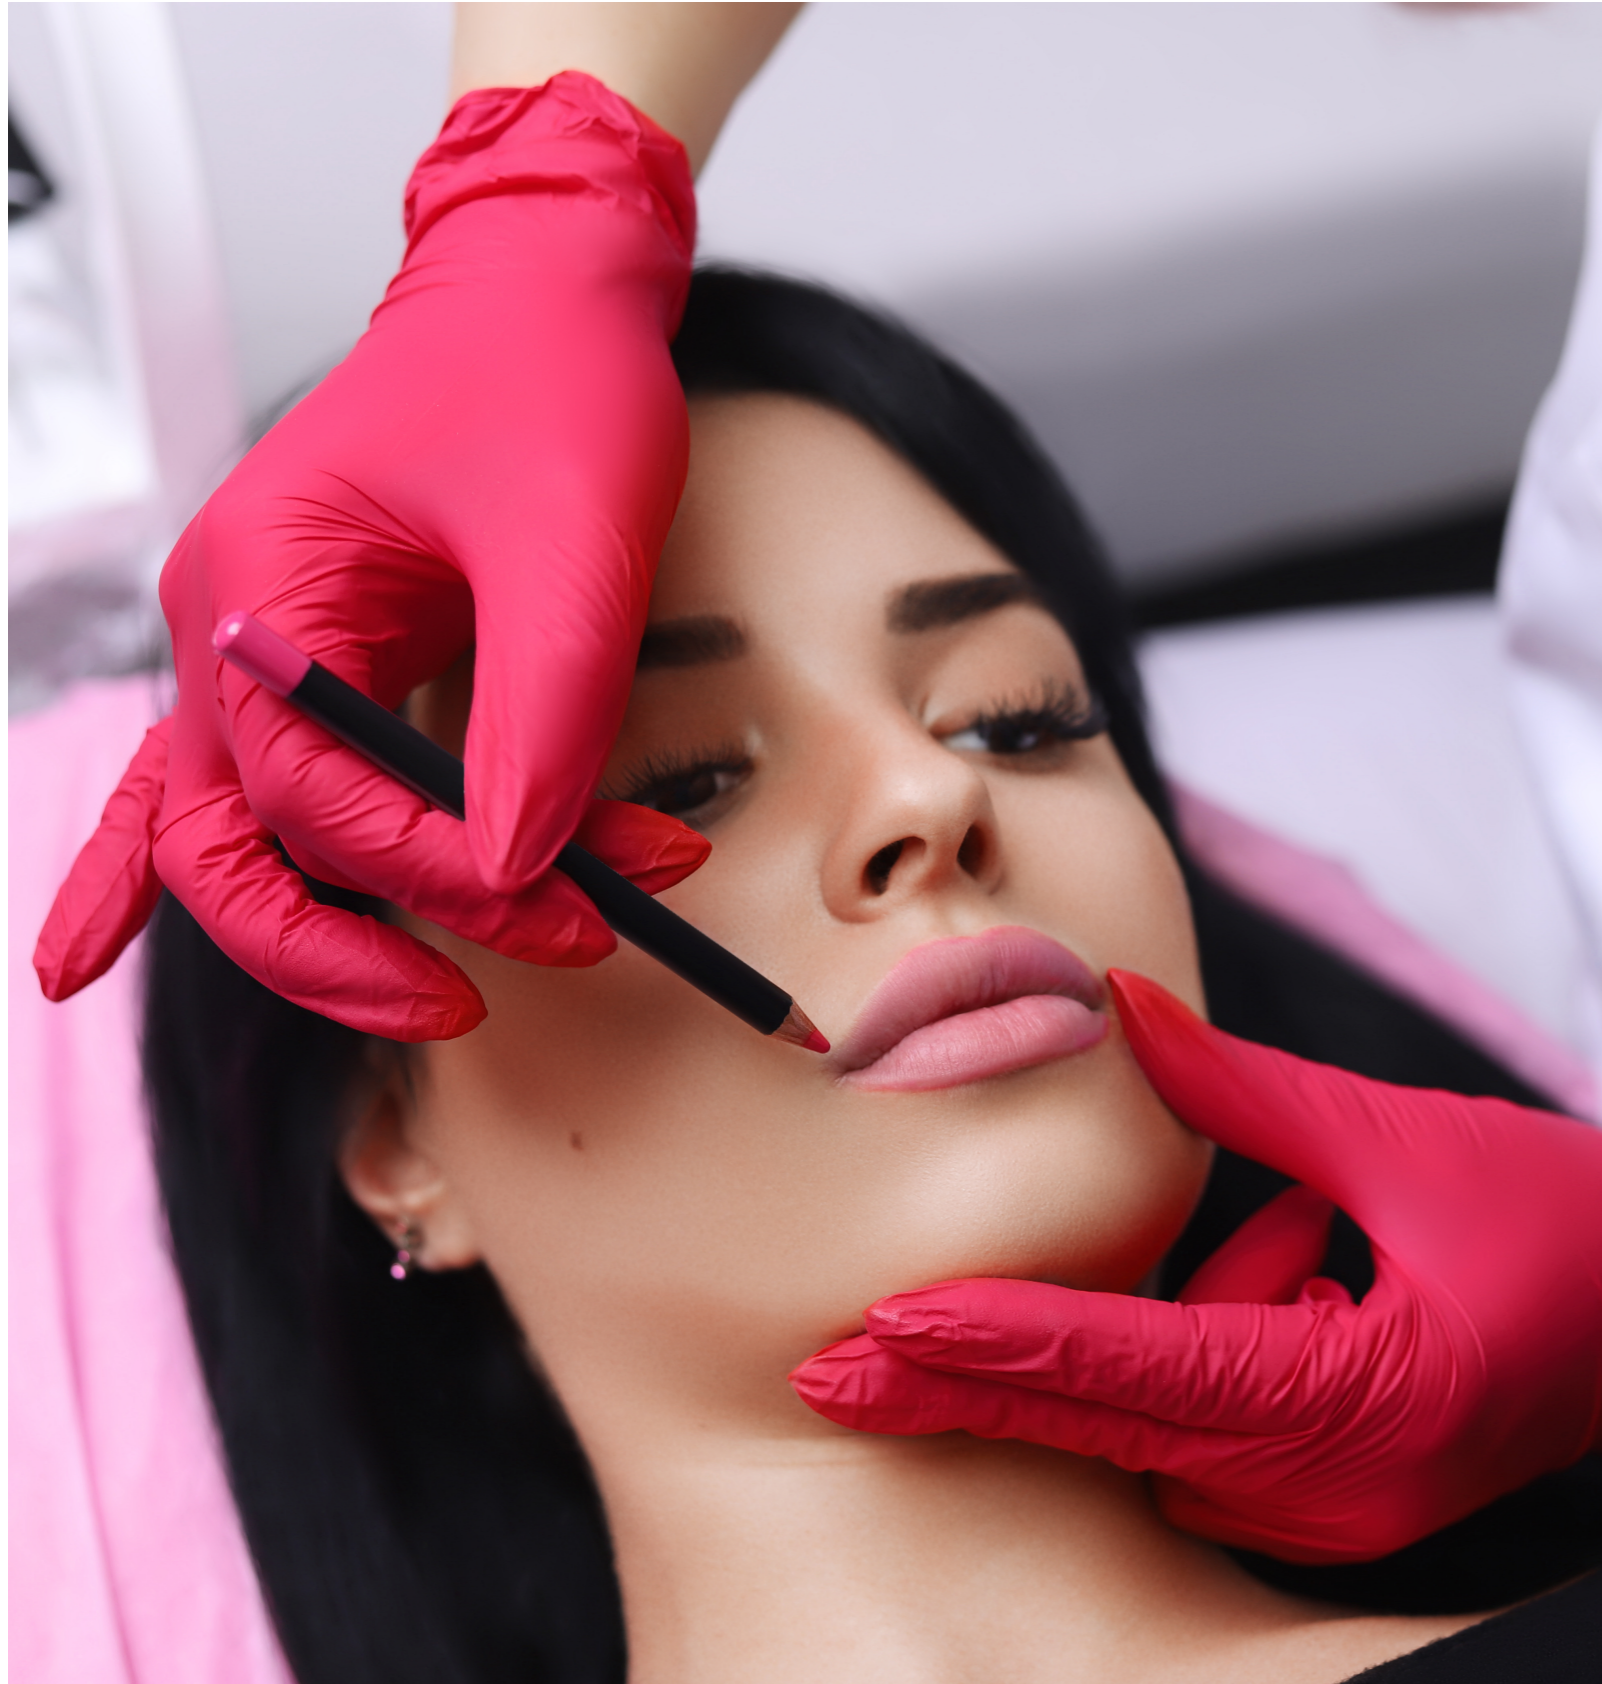

Kyleigh herself began being fascinated by the sheer beauty of Latinas and began adapting her style to that narco beauty she was starting to admire in order to be more popular with the boys. She began by tanning in the hot New Mexico sun and dying her blonde hair black. She picked up some Spanglish words from her new friends and slipped more and more into the local culture. She also switched her major from nursery to Spanish literature, which was a pretty popular choice in the local campus.

Her mum began learning Mexican food recipes and soon enough tacos and burritos became an integral part of their diet. Her dad David also began adapting to the local customs and eventually learned he could round up his salary by becoming a drug dealer.

Kyleigh became quickly popular with the boys and even began dating Latinos, who she had to admit were very passionate lovers.

When she met Juan, son of his father's new buddy from his drug dealing businesses, something more serious began. She really liked the guy. Unfortunately for her, he already had a girlfriend, a pretty Hispanic girl named Cristina and made it clear that she was more like his type than Kyleigh. The girl didn't give up and began planning her strategy to win his heart.

Encouraged by her mum, who suggested that “a good healthy tan goes a long way” and that she needed to beat this latina girl in her own strengths, she decided to alter her appearance to match Juan’s taste in women.

With the savings she had from a lowly-paid waitress job in a taco restaurant, all she could afford was a trip to a cheap cosmetic surgeon across the border in Mexico, where she got lip injections to make them big and thick lips, permanent brown color contacts attached to her irises and some minor touches to her face to look hotter and more exotic, hoping to steal Juan from his girlfriend.

She underwent multiple tanning sessions to accelerate the natural tanning process at those low latitudes and made sure to dress in a revealing way to show off her tanned body.

When she came back a few weeks later, her parents themselves struggled to recognise her. They commented positively on her changed appearance and welcomed her decision when Kyleigh asked to be called Camila from that day on.

The next time she saw Juan with Cristina she shamelessly flirted with him to the point that the poor guy couldn't hide a hard-on in presence of his girlfriend. Camila and Juan soon started dating and Juan eventually left his girlfriend to be together with Camila. Her family welcomed Juan as part of the family and his family did the same with Camila. This made their fathers even closer crime associates and further improved his illegal earnings, until he decided to resign from his boring, blue-collar job and be a full-time drug dealer. Camila in the meanwhile dropped off from college and became a full-time waitress in a taco restaurant.

After less than a year Camila's family had happily readjusted to the new cultural environment and wouldn't trade their current life with their old one for anything.